EUROPEAN WAR NEWS SUMMARY

The landing of German troops on the lelands at the l Gulf of Riga focuses attention upon the aims of the German high command in this newest phase of its Russian campaign. There is no longer any question that this is an operation in great force and that its intent official reports concerning the land-and-sea offensive are now at hand from Berlin and Petrograd, but they bring it up only to the evening of last Friday. At that time, the Germans, estimated to number two divisions, or between 25,000 and 30,000 men, had effected a completely successful landing on Oesel Island, the more southern of the group off the Esthonian coast between the head of the Gulf of Riga and the Gulf of Finland. The German troops were marching southward over Oesel, driving the Russians before them.

AIM TO CONTROL GULF. The primary object of the Germans is patently to clear the Irben channel, entrance to the Gulf of Riga, and control it. As to their secondary object, one can merely speculate. The island group north of Oesel constitutes a difficult, yet viable passage to the mainland which lies fully a hundred miles behind the Russian defensive line northeast and east of Riga. A landing on the mainland in force would become a threat against the Russian line from the rear and would gravely menace the Russian forces should they conclude to abandon their defenses and retreat. More remotely, the German operation threatens Kronstadt and Petrograd itself.

The Germans employed a great fleet of transports, mine sweepers, and the light and heavy ships of the Baltic squadron against Ossel Island. Apparently the Russians, worfully few in number and badly equipped, made only a half-heavted resistance. German dreadmaughts bombarded the Russian land batteries and silenced them without difficulty. Thereupon the troops were debarked and the Russians withdrew. channel, entrance to the Gulf of Riga, and control it. As to their

FOES OVERRUN ISLAND.

The Germans landed on the northern end of Oesel Island and at latest accounts had overrun its greater part. The island is about 1,000 square miles in extent. Its southern side holds the largest town, Arensburg, and a long spit extending into the Irben channel, known Arensburg, and a long spit extending into the Irben channel, known as the Svorb peninsula. This is the German objective, since it controls the entrance to the Gulf of Riga. The Germans were reported eight miles from Arensburg in the Russian official report.

A landing was also attempted on Dagoe Island, to the north of Oesel, but this was probably partly in the nature of a feint. Very likely, also, the Germans thought to find Dagoe poorly defended and an easy victory there and subsequent possession would have made passage to the mainland so much simpler. However, the Russians drove the Germans off and the land batteries succeeded in sinking four German destroyers and a light cruiser.

ARTILLERY ACTIVITY IN FLANDERS.

On the Western front, in Flanders, the British and French have begun a vigorous bombardment of the new German positions, following extensive reconnoitering, both in the air and through raiding ing extensive reconnoisering, both in the air and through raiding patrols. The Germans have pursued the same tactics in regard to the new British positions. No infantry activity has occurred in the past thirty-six hours, but the scouting and artillery developments portend renewed engagements in force.

On the Aisne and Verdun fronts, there has also been spirited artillery firing. North of the Aisne, this activity developed greatest vigor along the plateau between Ailles and Craonne, to the west center of the Chemin des Dames. On the Verdun front, the activity is east of the Meuse, in the region of Hill 344.

Henry Morgenthau, formerly ambassador to Constantinople, is an exact and reliable man. He an exact and reliable man. He declares that before Prince Ferdinand was murdered and his death taken as a pretext for war, "the Austrian Emperor had confided to his ambassador to Turkey that war was inevitable." This means that Morgenthau was told so by that ambassador to Turkey.

And Morgenthau adds this: "A still more remarkable confirmation came to me from Baron Wangenheim, the German ambas-sador at Constantinople. In an outburst of enthusiasm, after the arrival of the Goeben and the Breslau in the Dardanelles, he having directed their movements by wireless while they were en-deavoring to escape from the British fleet, the German ambassador informed me that a conference had been held in Berlin in the early part of July, 1914, at which the date of the war was fixed."

OF COURSE the war was planned by the Emperor. When a man spends years sharpening a knife he means to use it. The Emperor's plan was to provide a
